“ It's hard to let go of childhood friends. Countless hours sitting on Deb's front porch swing talking about school and home. We had deeper discussions too about novels, poetry and drama. I was horrible at drama, Deb was awesome. She was always quoting from her favorite authors, e. e. cumming, Langston Hughes, Siddhartha. While my quotes came from the Wit and Wisdom of Snoopy! Thank you, Deb for opening up my world! Rest now and "Listen to the Warm"- Rod McKuen

“ Remember early high school days when we walked around her neighborhood and talked. She loved to read and enlightened me to many things. A creative spirit. Sorry we never reconnected. Rest well Deb.

“ I used to see Deb a lot during our first two years in Bloomington. I remember that she read a lot of poetry and was a good creative writer. Very sorry to hear this news.

It may be a little late but I just discovered Deb's passing just today. I met Deb in 7th grade when we took classes together and then the bus rides to and from school everyday. She was always creative, literary, opinionated and graciously kind and introduced me to the world that was outside the limits of the small town we grew up in. We would talk hours upon hours about where are futures would take us knowing that it would probably not be Huntington, Indiana. I will always remember her as the person who gave me the courage to always push the limits no matter what.
