“ When I was growing up, I always thought that Butch was the coolest dude around w/ his dark hair slicked back, tattoos, shirt-sleeve rolled up w/ a pack of cigs in one of them, boots for riding, and that never-ending twinkle in his eye and the "smirk".

Butch was tough, but yet gentle in nature; serious, but yet full of humor. He was not a man of many words, and that was necessary because his actions told the story of what he believed and represented.

Butch was a family man, and he loved and honored his family - both near and far.

I will miss Butch dearly, but I know that he has been reunited w/ his family and his soul is at peace.

May the love and support of family and friends sustain the Osborn men and their families. May they find comfort in knowing that his spirit lives on and the memories created will always live.
